CHARACTER / TEMPERAMENT

SOCIABILITY: High, adores people of all kinds. Unproblematic with strange dogs of either sex.

PREY DRIVE: Medium-High, loves to work for toys. Will chase small animals (squirrels, rabbits, etc) but is not obsessed about them.

FOOD DRIVE: Medium, will work for food no issue. Prefers working for toys.

STABILITY: High, never bothered by new environments, sounds, etc. Easy to take anywhere and never an issue.

Overall, Enzo is an easy, happy dog. While he has good drives, he is low arousal, thus he does not carry extra energy. It is easy for him to settle in the house or any place we go--a perfect off switch. He has never gone through a “stranger danger” phase, but instead has been open and friendly to everyone his whole life.

Enzo loves tracking and obedience, and often teeth-chatters when he is excited to work. In protection, his grips are calm and full, but could be a bit harder/stronger. In tracking, he is calm and methodical, and in obedience, he is an excited and joyful worker. As much as he loves the ball, he truly lights up when he is praised and we break out into personal play. This type of joy for handler engagement is what made his mother so immensely successful in such a range of dog sports. Above all else, these dogs crave a strong relationship with their handler, and make very devoted teammates.

Because the prey drive is not over the top, Enzo is like his mother on the hiking trails: very easy. For them, ball and handler are much better than chasing wildlife, so it is easy to train them for hiking off leash.

Like his parents, Enzo loves to get wet. Though we haven't tried dock diving formally yet, I am confident he would love the sport as much as Furrari. He enjoys stepping into the kiddie pool after playing and has already jumped into our pool at home!

As far as character is concerned, there isn't much I would change about Enzo. For high level sport, he could have more drive and intensity, but for a weekend warrior dog, he has the perfect mix of drive and enthusiasm for work plus the ability to chill and hang out.
